MARIA VITORATOS

Changing the conversation is a talk that brings the realities of work in the future and recognising how young people are being taken through an old-fashioned 'university for the sake of university' pathway rather than being prepared for the skillset and mindset needed to enhance and prepare themselves for a competitive life at work.

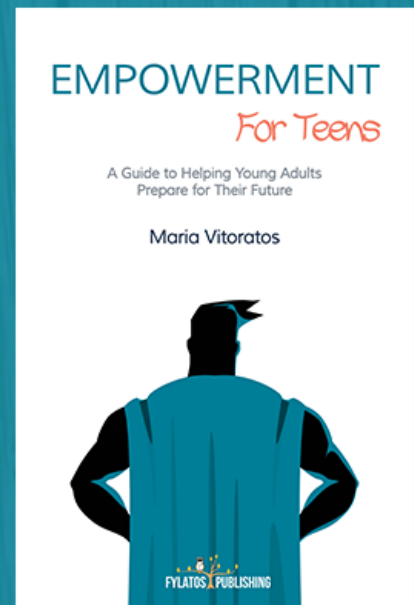

Changing the conversation is a talk that brings the understanding that a successful Careers Programme in schools to the forefront whilst sharing what great practice in career education & coaching looks like, students will be able to feel more prepared to make the choices for their future careers. The talk links career education, industry knowledge and the realities of work for students as young as 11 years old . It is an empowering experience that helps students, parents & educators prepare young people for making the right choices for their academic pathways while staying on-top of the future of work requirements which will leave them prepared for the expectations of their future employers, economies and to help them stand out of the crowd at interview days in their future

ENGAGING THE AUDIENCE IS ONE OF MARIA'S GREATEST STRENGTHS.

With recruiting the right talent at the core of any successful business in an ever more competitive world, it is vital that young people are not only gaining academic knowledge as students but most important is that they are gaining the right professional skills that will make them employable, empowered and successful in their future careers.
